New and Updated Nooks for e-Reading

The Friends of the Library have generously donated six new Nook e-Reader devices. These devices can be checked out for 14 days and come pre-loaded with a collection of library e-books.

Is there a long waiting list for your book club book? The library usually has only one or two copies of a title. However, upon request, we can make an e-book copy available for your book club on one of our Nook e-readers. Since we have multiple Nook devices, more copies of the book will be available, reducing wait times. Speak with a staff member for more information.

Happy New Year!

Relationships are complicated. It seems when we think of today's teenagers, we think of their seemingly constant striving to be accepted into the 'in crowd', the popular cool crowd. But some adults seem never to grow out of that struggle. In her new novel, OTHER PEOPLES'S

HOUSES, Clare Mackintosh entertains us with such a character whose story weaves in and out of two murder mystery cases and a disturbing neighborhood robbery streak being investigated and solved by the true main characters—the law officers. Prepare for the unexpected—and learn a little Welsh in the bargain....

1963 sometimes seems like just yesterday, but it is not. In William Boyd's latest novel, THE PREDICAMENT, it is the present for travel writer Gabriel Dax turned reluctant undercover spy. His enigmatic MI6 handler has just a short quick trip for him, interview and interface with the CIA. Just when he thinks/hopes the spy tasks are over for good and he can get back to his real life, he gets pulled in again. Boyd had me on the edge of my chair, waiting for something to go very, very wrong.

If you loved To Kill a Mockingbird do read THE LAND OF SWEET FOREVER, never before published stories and essays by Harper Lee. The stories pre-date the novel and delighted me. I have a brand new appreciation of her formidable skills.

Reading THE LIST, a novel of suspense by Steve Berry, was a jarring experience. The opening sentence in the Prologue gave me pause...but I read on anyway all the way to a satisfying conclusion. It turned out not to be a whodunit, but a whydunit, pitting conscience vs. the bottom line. Corruption does not just exist in our current daily news.

Moving on alone from loss and tragedy is a challenge at any time of life. Simon Van Booy's tiny novel, SIPSWORTH, immersed the reader into three years and two weeks of the life of 83 year old Helen Cartwright. After returning home from 60 years abroad, her next three years were handled in one sentence; it was clear she felt alone and unseen. But reading the unfolding of her next two weeks was like slowly unwrapping a surprise gift. Reading it was a delight not to be missed.

For me, reading THE BURNING LIBRARY by Gilly Macmillan was a paradoxical experience. It featured detailed, intricate word pictures of 15th Century antiquities, and highlighted the amazing skills possessed by those few academics, such as Dr. Anya Brown and her mother, who devote their lives to such studies. They are able to understand and communicate through highly coded words and images. But—the plot featured two ancient competing women's societies both of whose missions were to improve women's lives. At what point do ends justify means?
